Dear Colleagues, Ladies and Gentlemen

On behalf of the International Committee of Symposia on Morphological Sciences (ICSMS) it is my sincere pleasure to invite you to the XXVIth International Symposium on Morphological Sciences (ISMS), which will take place from 5th to 7th July 2018 in the heart and roof of Europe – Czech Republic, in its capital city – Prague.

It is the home of Charles University and its Second Faculty of Medicine, which will host this symposium in its Motol Faculty Hospital facilities.

The theme of the symposium is “From molecule to organ in the heart of Europe”. It will be a great chance for international morphological community to meet, discuss and present ideas, research results and hot topics in morphology, from molecular biology and cytology, across histology and embryology to gross, clinical and applied anatomy and anthropology, both in human and animal science and medicine.

It is our pleasure to invite specialists from all medical and natural science branches, from biologists and morphologists to clinicians, to increase our knowledge and to improve patient outcomes ultimately.

Online registration and abstract submission will start on Wednesday, November 1st, 2017. We expect oral and poster contributions in all areas of morphology.

Deadline of abstract submissions is Saturday, March 3th, 2018.

The meeting website www.isms2018.org provides all information including registration, scientific program, abstract submission, social program, details for hotel reservations etc. Please also follow us on Facebook: ISMS 2018 Prague.

Prague has excellent transport connections, including an airport only 30 minutes away from the town center and the congress venue.

We sincerely hope that the 26th ISMS in Prague, like all the past symposia before, will serve as a great opportunity to share our knowledge, to educate ourselves, to meet friends and to create new relationships.

Let us meet in the Prague, heart of Europe.

Yours,

David Kachlik
